Re: U.S. Non-Provisional Patent Application for System And Method
For Interactive, Computer Assisted Personalization Of On-Line Merchandise Purchases

Dear Sir:

Enclosed please find the following items:

1. a copy of the above-identified application;
2. an executed Declaration and Power of Attorney;
3. an executed Small Entity Statement;
4. a check in the amount of $354.00 to cover the filing fee; and
5. a stamped, self-addressed postcard.

Kindly stamp and return the postcard to the undersigned upon receipt in the Patent Office of the foregoing items.

Respectfully submitted,

SYSTEM AND METHOD FOR INTERACTIVE, COMPUTER ASSISTED
PERSONALIZATION OF ON-LINE MERCHANDISE PURCHASES

BACKGROUND OF THE INVENTION

Field of the Invention

The present invention relates to methods and apparatus to mass- personalize and customize merchandize, and provide online services for their purchase. These services include personalized configuration, intelligent recommendations, guided selection, and simplified purchase processes.

Description of Related Art

The advent of the Internet and Internet Commerce allows consumers to search for, or purchase merchandize on-line over a global computer network from anywhere at anytime. The browsing, selection, and purchasing processes on the Internet Commerce sites are similar to that of the information sites: "browse a list, select one item, view, back to the list, select another item, view, back to the list, and repeat,” thus cycling, until desired information is found, or a purchasing decision is made. Figure 1 illustrates this conventional Internet shopping process in detail. It is repetitive, click/wait intensive, and lack intelligent computerized assistance.

5 The home pages of Internet shopping sites universally contain three parts: a category list, a “featured” merchandize list, and a “search” box. Shoppers can choose to browse by categories, or by entering a “search” phrase in the “search” box. Or, if the “featured” list looks interesting, browse the featured list. All three routes can only be done with a “one-at-a-time” process. The shopper can only select one category among 10 the list of categories at a certain categorization level, by moving the cursor to the text-string representing the category, using the computer input device—the “mouse.” Then, click the left button on the “mouse,” and wait for the linked page to download to the shopper’s computer from the site server. The page usually contains the next level categories organized under that particular category, unless the end of the particular 15 category path is reached.

Similarly, only one “featured item” can be selected and clicked, for its linked descriptions to download, and viewed. The search function usually yields either too large a list, or too small and incomplete of a list, or nothing at all.

Even the most advanced state-of-the-art search engines do not always work 20 effectively to find “all” of the items that truly “qualify” the intended/desired rendered with the search phrase. When a search phrase is entered to command the search engine, the search engine looks for descriptions containing any number of words present in the search phrase. For example, if “romantic summer dresses” is entered, the search engine will likely return with a very large list of all items with descriptions containing any combination of the three words, such as “romantic” anything, “summer” anything, and anything with “dresses” In the description. Such example is shown with Shopping.Yahoo.Com (Figure 2). In Figure 3A1. “Romantic Dresses” is entered into the “search” box of Shopping.Yahoo.Com under Women’s Apparel category. The result list contains a “Romantic” CD, a “Romantic” jewelry set, and two “Romantic” cardigans. No “dresses” were found, probably because the descriptions of dresses do not contain the word “dresses,” but use “dress” as a descriptor instead. The more advanced engines allow users to specify searching for “all of the words,” or the “exact phrase.” Such engines limit the size of the result list. However, they also risk not finding or not including qualified items on the result list.

Therefore, in most cases, category browsing is the preferred path for serious browsers looking for information or merchandize. The basic steps of the category browsing process can be described as the following:

- I. Browse and surf the first level of available/listed categories of the site on the home page.
- II. Choose a category of interest, click, wait for a web page to download onto the shopper’s computer screen, and view the subcategories thus brought forth to the shopper’s computer from the site server.
- III. Repeat step II, until the last level of the categorization path on the site is reached, and a merchandize item list is displayed on the shopper’s computer screen.

IV. Review the item list, and choose and click on ONE item from the list that seems interesting.

V. Wait for the description of the item to be sent from the site-server.

VI. Review the description, and decide whether you wish to purchase the item.

5 VII. If affirmative, “add” the item into the virtual “shopping cart” of the site. If negative, click on the “back” function icon, and return to the list to choose another item on the list. Thus cycling.

VIII. Choose to “check out,” or “continue shopping.”

10 IX. If “continue shopping” is chosen, the server sends the home page onto the shopper’s computer, and steps I through VIII are repeated.

X. You may view the items in the “shopping-cart,” one-at-a-time, by clicking on ONE item among the list of items you have “added” into the “shopping cart;” wait for the description to download from the server onto the shopper’s computer display screen. Review the information. Return to the “shopping cart” content list, and repeat the process. What you see in this process is exactly the image and description of the item as seen in Step V.

There is no artificial intelligence or process automation applied to enable or perform selection, recommendation, configuration, or custom order functions.

A manifestation of this known-art Internet shopping process is illustrated in the purchasing of women’s apparel items from Shopping.Yahoo.Com, the largest, best funded, and the most advanced E-Commerce portal. For details, see Figure 2, and its description in the “BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE DRAWINGS” section.

The “search” function bypasses the category-browsing steps. By entering a short text string in the “search” box, and invoke the search function by clicking on the “search” button,” the search engine looks for items in the site-server database containing either any combination of words in the text string, and sends a listing of search result with a brief description to each item on the list to the desk-top display screen. Usually some items on the list are relevant, and some are not. The viewer of the list performs the intelligence process: “browse” the list, make judgment, select one item, click, wait, view the description page sent forth, make a decision, return to the list, pick another item, and repeat.”

The “search” process is illustrated with the Shopping.Yahoo.Com site. When the word “skirt” (itself also a category in women’s apparel) is entered in the “search” box on the site home-page Figure 3B1, Figure 3B2 is sent from the site-server. There are 10 category-paths where the word “skirt” is found, and 2,949 product entries found in the product database containing a word “skirt.” The first 1 through 20 items are listed in Figures 3B2, 3B3, and 3B4. In order to narrow the search result to a manageable size, we enter into the “search box” on Figure 3B4, “mid-length skirts” (a text string that is also a subcategory for “Skirts” on the category listing), click on the “search” button, and wait. Figure 3C1 is sent from the site server, showing one category path with 6 items, as well as the 2 other items found outside of the category path. When the category path is clicked, the listing of the 6 items is shown on the subsequent page sent from the site-server as shown in Figure 3C2. If the search phrase is changed to “long skirts,” itself also a subcategory under “Skirts” category, Figures 3D1 and 3D2 are sent to the shopper’s computer screen from the site server, showing the 3 category paths where the phrase “long skirts” are found, and the first 20 of the 354 items found in the Shopping.Yahoo.Com linked e-stores outside of the 3 search category paths. Search results are less convincing when a “non-category” phrase is entered. As described earlier in Figures 3A, results for “romantic dresses.” The two items of the four found are not apparel items, and the other two items are cardigans, not dresses. Figure 4 shows a similar shopping process at another state-of-the-art site, GAP.COM.

Other examples of merchandize that require fitting and coordination of sub-systems are large Kitchen Appliances. While there are sites that provide information and refer appliance shoppers to dealers and resellers, there exists no Internet site to date, where large appliances, such as kitchen appliances can be purchased. The most advanced sites that contain the most comprehensive information, graphics, specifications, and sophistication of kitchen appliances presentations are the GEAppliances.Com and the HomePortfolio.com sites. The GEAppliances.Com (Figure 5) is the appliances section of the General Electric site, GE.Com. The HomePortfolio.Com (Figure 6) is an up-scale home furnishing information portal site. The algorithm and processes on these two sites are the same as other sites, generally described in the process flowchart Figure 1 and the process step descriptions in pages 3 and 4 of this application. There is no correlation in the database between a number of required items that form a subsystem or a system; such as correlating Ventilation Hoods, lighting components and other accessories, and Back-splashes, to a group of Cooking Ranges with various options. The Cooking Ranges, for example, is presented as a category separate from the Hoods and the Back-guards, listed with separate and individual model numbers under each brand, with various available combinations of options of size, width, cook-top/oven arrangements, and fuel options.

Each combination of is treated as an individual product with its own model number and an individual view button to view details one-at a time, and otherwise uncorrelated (See Figure 5). The Back-guards (back-splashes) to the ranges and the Ventilation Hoods are treated as separate product lines. It is entirely up to the shopper to surf and view all information, category-by-category, and item-by-item, to figure out what are out there: the options, the connections between models, what is available to match what. This is an intimidating and tedious task even for the professionals in the “know.” Thus, all appliance sites serve only as information posting, lead generation, and dealer referral network, without purchasing or ordering functions.

The most recent “Virtual-Reality” or “3D software, such as Macromedia Shockwave are devised to allow using the pointer and mouse to rotate a still photograph of an individual still-object on the computer screen to connect to, and view images of the other sides of the object (the shopper’s computer needs to be equipped with the required client software), as shown in Figure 7. In other instances, Apple Quick-Time allows computer users to use the mouse device to “rotate” a room, by downloading and accessing images taken by a “360°” rotating/panning camera to scan a stationary house or a store from continually varying angles. Primitive motion-video or streaming-video are used to broadcast conferences, motion-pictures/ movies, or television-like programming to the shopper’s computer over the Internet or the Corporate Intranet.

An object container, such as a “folder,” a “shopping cart,” or a “shopping bag,” are used to deposit multiple individual items as a list of unrelated individual instances, when the on-line shopper purchases multiple items, as individual instances of purchases, unassisted and self-coordinated, or, randomly. These containers can be “opened” to see the collected items listed separately as individual items. Only one link token representing one single particular item can be clicked to allow the shopper to view the graphics and the detailed descriptions of the item again, as seen before it was deposited into the shopping container (Figures 2M, 1N, and 1O).

5 No process, method or apparatus exists to-date on the Internet that performs recommendation, selection, coordination, and composition and display systematically, of the gathering of information of, and/or purchases of multiple items.

SUMMARY OF THE INVENTION

10 The present invention relates to methods and apparatus to mass- personalize and customized merchandize and purchase services on-line, such as intelligent recommendations, guided selection and purchase processes, configuration, coordination, fitting, composed and animated presentation, demonstration, etc., based on individual customer input and intelligence rules-databases and comparison algorithms.

15 Interactive, intelligent process and rule-driven enquiry-database, intelligent product databases, artificial intelligence rules, data comparison algorithm, graphics and video design, composition, animation software, graphics and video input and output hardware and software, and/or video streaming are used to (1) guide consumers through needs and tastes definition process, (2) make recommendations, (3) narrow selections, (4)
20 determine the fit, (5) configure and optimize various options of subsystems into a complete system, (6) layout, compose and/or animate, and (7) display the fitted system of multiple items with the recommended and/or selected settings. Automated virtual reality that does not require shopper's mouse movement command and control is used for displaying stationary objects where desired, and modeled and animated motion video is used where appropriate or desired to display those objects to be used in motion.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE DRAWINGS

1. Figure 2A is the home-page of Shopping.Yahoo.Com, listing the available categories of the site.
2. Figures 2B1 and 2B2 are sent from the site server, when and if “Women’s” under the “Apparels and Accessories” is selected and clicked, listing the subcategories under the “Women’s” category of the top-level “Apparels and Accessories” category.
3. Figure 2C is sent from the site server, showing the list of subcategories under “Dresses and Skirts,” when and if the “Dresses and Skirts” category on Figure 2B1 is chosen and clicked.
4. When and if the “Dresses” subcategory is chosen and clicked, Figure 2D is sent from the site-server, listing the subcategories under the “Dresses” category.
5. When and if the “Empire Waist” subcategory on Figure 2D is chosen and clicked, Figures 2E1 and 2E2 are sent from the site server, indicating that 12 “Empire Waist Dresses” are found from the site, and list the first 10 of the 12 dresses found. The “Next” button can be clicked to see the “next”

10 items or the remaining items. In this case, there are only 2 items remaining.

6. When and if the V-Neck Dress is chosen and clicked in Figure 2E1, Figure 2F is sent from the site server, showing an enlarged picture of the dress, and the textual information regarding the item. The shopper, if so decide, can then choose the “color” and the size of the item to purchase. In our example, “A-Cadet Blue” is chosen for the color, and “Small” is chosen for the size, and then the “Order” button clicked.
7. Figure 2G is brought forth from the site-server, showing the content of the “shopping cart,” listing the V-Neck Dress just purchased. If the V-Neck Dress text-string is clicked, Figure 2F is sent to the screen again, still with the red color of the dress, even though the order was placed for “A-Cadet Blue.” The color order is indicated with the text-string in the “color” option box only.
8. When and if the “keep shopping” button at the end of the page is clicked, the Shopping.Yohoo.Com home-page, Figure 2H is sent from the site server again, showing the primary shopping categories. The steps 2 through 7 are repeated. Here we choose “Women” again under the “Apparels and Accessories” category, Figures 2I1 and 2I2 are brought forth. Click the on the “Dresses and Skirts,” Figure 2I3 is sent from the site server, listing subcategories for “Dresses and Skirts.” Click the “Skirts” category, the list of sub-categories under “Skirt” is sent from the site-server, as shown in Figure 2J. The “long” category is chosen and clicked. Figures 2K1 and 2K2 is sent from the site server, showing 33 “long skirts” from 8 e-stores linked to Shopping.Yahoo.Com. We choose the 4th item, the “Floral Print Georgette Skirt,” and click. The enlarged

9. The “shopping cart” Figure 2M is brought forth from the site-server again, listing the added item. By clicking on the V-Neck Dress item, Figure 2N (Same as Figure 2F) is sent, showing your selection. By clicking on the Floral Print Georgette Skirt, size 6 as purchased, Figure 2O is sent, here still showing the default size 4 before the selection, an error at the Yahoo

5B: Lists the 2nd level categories under “Ovens, Ranges & Cooktops,” sent from the site server when it is clicked on 5A.

5C: Sent from the site server when “Ranges” is clicked on 5B. The “scroll bar” at the right side of the page scrolls down to list more individual models.

Clicking on the “View” button in each box representing a model, and wait, allows you to see a picture of that model sent from the site server.

5D: “Search” for “Appliances” by entering the word in the “search” box, and click, causes the site server to send a list of URLs (web addresses) containing a word “appliances” in its entry tag.

5E: “Search” for “Range” in the same fashion, brings a list of URLs containing the word “range” or “ranges.” There are 9 pages of listing. Each page can be access by clicking on the page index at the top and the bottom of the list, one-at-a-time. Each item/entry on a page can be access by clicking on the entry, one at a time.

5F: “Search” result for “Monogram.”

5G1 to 5G5: The listing of “Monogram” Products. You read the tables, and decide what interest you, if you can, and click on the “view” button to view the picture, which would link you to other details.

6B: Lists the 2nd level categories under the “Appliances” category.” The page is sent from the site server to the shopper’s computer screen, when “Appliances” is clicked on the home page 6A, or entered into the search boxes, and “Go” clicked.

6C: When “Ranges” is clicked, this page is loaded from the server to the computer screen, showing the number of “Ranges” under each Manufacturer, a total of 102 items. Clicking on ONE underlined text, brings you a listing of the products by that manufacturer.

6D: Is the result of “search” for “Ranges” within “all categories.” The list states that there are 266 items, and lists the first 25 items on 3 pages. To see lists of more items, click on the page number index on the third of the 3 pages. The search resulted in more than twice the number of items identified with category path. It could be that the search result included the Hoods.

6E: When GE Monogram is clicked on 6C, this page is loaded to the screen. Information on each item is accessed through clicking on the item.

6F: When the first of the three “48” Professional Range” entries on 6E is clicked, the 1st level detail is show.

6G: The 1st level detail of the second “48” Professional Range.” It is up to the shopper to read, and figure out the difference between the two entries on his/her own.

6H: The 3rd “48” Professional Range” entry.

6I: If you happen to know that a Range would need a Hood in practical use, you go back to the 1st level categories on the home page 6A, and look for the “Range Hoods.”

6J: If the “GE Monogram” is clicked on the entry listings for “Range Hoods” on 6I, this page is loaded to the screen. From here, you click one item at a time, to “see more” about each item.

Figure 10: The Inner Working of a temporary, instant and customer specific working database, the “Configuration Database.” The Configuration Database contains only the configuration relevant data. It can either be sent to the shopper’s computer, or reside at the server, or both. The configuration process/wizard searches for needed parts and information from this much smaller database, thus greatly improves the speed of the process and cuts data traffic and loading time.

11A1 through 11A4: the Apparel Wizard Process Steps, Preference Selection Menu, and Data Entry Tables.

11B: Apparel Wizard as it appears on the web-site for a shopper who elects to shop for women’s business-formal apparel. The “featured” items are already intelligently selected to suit the general taste of the shopper. The Wizard use the menu and data entry tables on the right side of the screen to solicit information and intent of the shopper’s current shopping trip.

11C: An array of recommended items are sent by the Wizard to the shopper’s computer screen based on the shopper’s entry in 11B, as well as prior profiling knowledge of the shopper, and predetermined intelligence rules. In this example, the shopper requested Business-Formal apparel to be used for the Spring and Summer seasons, with colors in white/ cream, beige/sand, pink/peach, navy, and charcoal or grey. The shopper also requested matching shoes.

5 11D: Accessory Configuration: On screen 11C, the shopper “drag and drop” the black/white shoes to match with the creamy-white pant-suit at the lower left corner of the array; changed the beige skirt suit on the upper left corner to pink, and accepts the suits and shoes configured by the Wizard as shown in 11C on the top row. The enlarged four selected ensembles are shown here. The detailed 10 information and further animation and display is accessed by moving the cursor to one particular ensemble, or through clicking on the individual picture of that ensemble.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION OF THE INVENTION

15 The present invention, the Wizard, uses interactive, rule-driven, intelligent databases, algorithm, and software, including but not limited to the following: (1) Interactive, intelligent, guided, categorically organized, and process- and rule- driven questionnaires tagged and stored in a database, to be deployed for defining individual shopper’s needs and tastes; (2) intelligent product database with detailed descriptions, and 20 pre-determined rules of tagging and connectivity; (3) user-defined rules, (4) rule-base algorithms, (5) comparison software. The Wizard makes on-line merchandise recommendations and computer assisted selections tailored to each shopper’s personal needs, tastes, and applications.

Recommended and selected items are further fit, matched, configured, animated, and displayed together on the computer screen for the shopper's review and approval. Figure 8 shows the process flow of the present invention, in contrast to that of the known-art as shown in Figure 1.

5 In the present invention, access to merchandize and information are offered through 5 options: the graphical icons, the category paths, the interactive, intelligent rule-driven questionnaire (the Wizard), the "Featured," and the "Search" function. The Wizard offers assistance again at various points, even when the Icons, Categories, Featured, and Search options were chosen at first.

10 The Wizard guides the intelligent information collection process with the shopper, compiles the information collected, search the intelligent database for items qualify the shopper's intent, make the recommendation by displaying the items on the computer screen for the shopper. The shopper can either elect to have the Wizard assist the selection process, or review and choose on his/her own. If the Wizard's assistance is 15 chosen, the Wizard further explores and refines, the shoppers' intent, makes refined selections, retrieve all relevant information of selected items and their connected/related items to for a sub-database for the shopper, and display in a coordinated, organized, and comprehensible manner the refined selection recommendations. The shopper than determine whether to proceed. If affirmative, the Wizard begins to guide the shopper to 20 configure a complete subsystem. If negative, the Wizard presents the questionnaire as answered before, and interactively works with the shopper to modify the questions and answers. When the configuration of a subsystem is completed and presented, the shopper can place the order immediately or save in a folder for revisit later, and proceed to configure another subsystem or system.

The current invention minimizes confusion, uncertainty, saves the numerous “clicks” and waits (for web page down-loading) a shopper must go through in the known art process. Purchasing processes and decisions are made easier, more intelligent, more pleasurable, and more likely to be correct, thus reducing returns and wasted resources.

The embodiment of the invention entails the following:

(1) An “Interactive, intelligent, rule driven Wizard/Questionnaire database.” The Wizard database is tagged, accessible, and linkable at various entry points by merchandise categories and/or merchandise types, and names.

(2) Merchandise items are grouped with its type-group database, and each described with proper keywords and detailed information. Also included are links to each item’s matching items and accessories.

For example, an apparel database stores all apparel items, each with its pictures, detailed dimensions, material, make, style, color, brand, designer, pattern, usage, and descriptions, as well as artificial intelligence coordination rules of the matching colors, fabric, styles, cuts and descriptions matching apparel items and accessories. When applicable, links to other items specifically designed to match the particular items are also included—such as bags and shoes that are designed to match the dress, or ties and shirts that fit the suit.

A kitchen appliance database would link each appliance to its photographs, options, detailed descriptions, drawings, needed accessories, operating and installation manuals, as well as the list of pointers to other appliances that match the particular appliance in style, color, type, class, and operation, including links to suitable appliances from different manufacturers.

Cabinetry, countertop, sinks, faucets, and lighting databases would also link to, and complement the appliances database.

5 (3) A search engine, with comparison functions, artificial intelligence rules and user input rules for acceptance, rejection, recommendation, and change specifications.

 (4) A layout and schematics program that adjusts, fits, and layout components according to external user specified parameter. For example, given dimensions of the room, walls, and placement of windows, selected appliances can be fit with selected 10 counters and cabinets, layout made, and schematics and elevation diagrams made and presented.

 (5) A separate database stores images of models for animation and morphing. For example, in the Apparel applications, such database would contain images of real models, or computer generated models, or morphed combination of both, of varying complexion, 15 hair and eye colors, physical build, motion dynamics, etc., with description tags.

 (6) An animation/graphics composition and morphing program with image and motion creation, manipulation, morphing, and input and output display capabilities that can select proper base images from the “models” database/library then alter, modify, or morph according to user input, to present the configured system/subsystem at the chosen 20 settings.

 (7) A video input, composition, editing, streaming and output program that serves to display assembled merchandize that are normally used in motion.

(8) A Temporary Working Database structured to accommodate the Wizard-Shopper active working data, such that the “system configuration” can be accomplished at the highest speed, and minimum data traffic time.

(9) A Dynamic Personal-Folders Database that stores customer profiling, history, and working data and links.

To further and concretely illustrate the current invention, an application of the invention to Appliance Shopping is shown in Figure 9, in contrast to the processes found on GEAppliance.Com (Figures 5) and HomePortfolio.Com (Figure 6) sites for searching for Appliance information and dealers.

Figures 9A1 through 9A3 illustrates the Appliance-Wizard questionnaire and process steps. When a shopper enter the class of goods he/she is looking for, in the example here, Appliance(s) through either “search” or “category” paths, or clicking on an active icon in a graphical presentation, a specific Wizard is invoked from the Wizard/Questionnaire library/database. In this case, the Appliance-Wizard is invoked. The first set of relevant questions to guide the shopper in his/her quest is shown on the computer screen, and the shopper is prompted to high-light his/her selections by either checking the check boxes in front of each possible choices, or clicking on the text strings representing the choices. Shown here as bolded text-string when the shopper clicks each text-string representative of his/her intentions or desires of the quest.

Appliance		Kitchen	High-end, Extra features
Large	Single	Bath	Mid-range
Small	Multiple	Laundry
		House	Economy pricing & solid performance
		Other

The Appliance Wizard presents the menu of large Kitchen Appliances for the shopper to select. The menu includes the “Whole Kitchen” for the shopper’s convenience. After the interested appliances are selected, the Wizard presents the menu 5 of the makers who produce the qualified appliances.

When the selection of the Maker(s) is completed, the Wizard presents the relevant menu of choices or questions as show in Figure 9A2, in order to make intelligent and applicable recommendations. Since in our example, the shopper chose “Whole Kitchen,” and GE monogram, the Wizard proceeds to ask for the preferred countertop and cabinet 10 material, style, and color, and the approximated size, shape, and dimensions of the Kitchen. Based on the shopper input, the Wizard search the databases, performs preliminary floor plan, and presents the recommendation as shown in Figure 9B. The Wizard prompts the shopper through the entire process in specification and configuration of the options of each appliance. The shopper clicks on an individual appliance on 15 Figure 9B to determine which appliance to configure first, next, etc..

Figure 9C illustrates the Configuration Chart/Process for Ranges, 9D illustrates the Order Screen when the configuration process is completed. When the ordering process is completed, the Wizard presents Figure 9B again for the shopper to choose the next appliances to configure. The shopper can also exit the process at any time, and the 20 data up to that point would be saved in the Personal Folder for revisit later. During the configuration process, any similar and compatible appliances from different makers can be requested and selected.

Figure 10 shows an instance of the inner working of the Wizard. When the shopper choose the GE Monogram Range as the product he/she wants to configure and purchase, the Wizard fetches all relevant GE Monogram Range options from the large database, and store these relevant data in a temporary “working database.” This small database can be sent to the “client” computer—the shopper’s computer, or retained on the site-server. The configuration process interacts with this much smaller, relevant, and local working-database, at a far faster speed, without having to traffic data through the network.

Applying the current invention to Apparels and Accessories, the Apparel Wizard solicits input from the shopper with well-designed menus and data entry tables. Based on the shopper input and pre-determined intelligence rules, the Wizard searches the product database, selects and recommends pertinent/qualified products and accessories. The Wizard also displays “ensembles” using a model or mannequin when requested. The model or mannequin is selected from the “models” database, and morphed to fit the shopper’s descriptions when so requested. The model or mannequin can be further animated to walk, turn, run-way motions, sit, etc., on the shopper’s computer screen for the shopper’s viewing and approval.

A user/shopper is prompted to specify the types (dresses, suits, etc.), and applications (business formal, business casual, evening, day, town, cocktail, party, formal occasions, Spring and Summer, or Winter and Fall, etc.), preferred colors, fabric, style, designer, and make. Wearer’s measurements and build, desired accessories, etc. can also be conveniently entered. Both “inclusion” and “exclusion” mechanism are used for the shopper’s convenience in making preference selections. For example, if a shopper wishes to see all colors except orange, pink, and yellow, these colors can be “excluded,” and vice versa. This “exclusion” mechanism can be implemented in many ways. For example, an “inclusion” or “exclusion” box can be “checked” before proceeding to make “checks” for color choices, as whether the color “checks” are either “inclusion” or “exclusion” checks.

- 5 Or, an automated “select all” can be included, and the shopper can “uncheck” the “undesired” options to exclude them. Any preference selection step can be skipped, if the shopper wishes to keep the options open.

At any stage of input, an array of relevant and pertinent recommendations can be presented on the screen on demand. The array is narrowed or enhanced interactively, as 10 the Wizard gains input from the shopper. Each ensemble can be altered, pieces moved from one ensemble to another, and color changed (if available), and re-assembled interactively. The “finished” and “approved” ensembles can be displayed, simulated and animated according to the shopper’s choices. The shopper can also buy the whole ensemble, or any parts of the ensemble.

15 The can select interested items (e.g. a blouse or a dress) from the array, and further specify desired matching item(s) that many not be included in the array. For example when the shoes, bags, visors, hats, belts recommended and shown with the/a dress do not strike the shopper’s fancy, the shopper can make requests to be shown other options. The Wizard searches the database based on the user’s input, in combination with 20 pre-determined, trained intelligence rules. The user can over-ride the pre-determined intelligence rules, if so desired. For example, if a user selects a light blue shirt, and specifies green for the slacks, the Wizard would respond to the user that green is not a recommended color for matching to light blue. The user can then decide override the

Wizard and stay with his/her selection, change color specification, or leave the color and style selection to the intelligence rules the Wizard uses. The Wizard assembles a shopper specific "working database," such that the configuration, display, and change processes are performed quickly with this personally narrowed and selected working database. If 5 the final ensembles need minor alteration in the cut according to the user measurements, the Wizard issues an alteration alert.

At user request, and based on the user input of the wearer's descriptions, a model can be selected or generated, wearing the items selected, and animated to walk across the computer screen, turn, sit, and stand, or make sports movements as appropriate, such as 10 golfing or tennis.

The present invention can be applied to the personalized gathering/assembly of information, procurement, configuration, and packaging of all types products and services of all manners over a private or public electronic/computer network.

The present invention is implemented using software which can be written in 15 many programming languages, or implemented with many web-page generation tools. The present invention can be used on a global or local computer network, on a personal computer, on viewable storage media such as a CD or DVD ROM, on a wireless telephone, on a wireless personal assistant such as a Palm Pilot®, or on any type of wired or wireless device that enables digitally stored information to be viewed. Also,
20 information displayed and viewed using the present invention can be printed, stored to other storage medium, and electronically mailed to third parties.

Numerous modifications to and alternative embodiments of the present invention will be apparent to those skilled to the art in view of the foregoing description.

Accordingly, this description is to be construed as illustrative only and is for the purpose of teaching those skilled in the art the best mode of carrying out the invention. Details of the structure may be varied substantially without departing from the spirit of the invention and the exclusive use of all modifications which come within the scope of the appended

5 claims is reserved.

CLAIMS

What is claimed is:

1. A system for purchasing goods and services online, comprising:

means for prompting a user to specify preferences regarding at least one type of 5 merchandise or service of interest to a user by having the user answer a plurality of questions, the means then retrieving data responsive to the indicated preferences from at least one database and displaying said data on a display device.

2. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the means are comprised of:

10 a questionnaire database that prompts the user to answer a plurality of questions to specify user preferences with regard to the at least one type of merchandise;

a merchandise database having textual and graphical data regarding the at least one type of merchandise, the merchandise database using artificial intelligence coordination rules to match the merchandise with accessories and having links to 15 databases for other types of merchandise;

a search engine using comparison functions, artificial intelligence rules and user input rules;

a layout and schematics program for preparing and displaying a floor plan depicting merchandise selected by the user, wherein the dimensions and other 20 architectural features of the floor plan are provided by the user;

a models database having images of models;

an animation and morphing program for providing image and motion creation and morphing to models selected from the model database by the user, wherein the selected models wear merchandise selected by the user, the user able to alter the models and the models' features; a temporary working database in which the user works while using the system;

and

5 a personal folder database for storing the data from the temporary working database.

3. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the user specifies user preferences by either checking at least one box in front of a possible choices or clicking
10 on a text string representing that choice.

4. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system provides the user with the names of a plurality of vendors for the merchandise specified by the user.

15 5. The system according to Claim 4, wherein after the user selects a vendor, the system asks the user to specify additional information regarding the products of the vendor selected by the user.

6. The system according to Claim 1, wherein based on specifications
20 provided by the user, the system prepares and displays a recommended floor plan showing each item of merchandise selected by the user.

7. The system according to Claim 6, wherein the system prompts the user to examine and specify specifications and configurations for each merchandise item.

8. The system according to Claim 7, wherein the user uses an input device to 5 click on an individual item of merchandise shown on the display device to determine which goods to configure.

9. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system retrieves data in response to user specified preferences from a first database and stores the retrieved data in 10 a second local database which is smaller than the first database, thereby enabling the user to interact with the system without having to traffic data through a network and thus at a faster speed than would be possible if the user had to traffic data through the network.

10. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system uses menus and data 15 entry tables to solicit preferences from the user.

11. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system uses predetermined intelligence rules together with preferences input by the user to search merchandise databases and select and recommend merchandise and accessories to the user.

12. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system selects a model from a model database and morphs the model using specifications provided by the user.

13. The system according to Claim 12, wherein the system uses an animation graphics composition morphing program to cause the model to be animated and to engage in a full range of movement displayed on the display device.

5 14. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system includes both inclusion and exclusion mechanisms to assist the user in making preference selections.

15. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system includes an automated select all feature wherein all possible preferences are automatically included 10 unless excluded by the user.

16. The system according to Claim 1, wherein at any stage of interaction with the system, an array of recommendations can be presented on the display device, the array able to be narrowed or enhanced interactively as the system gains input from the user.

15 17. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the system can display a plurality of ensembles of clothing for viewing by the user, each ensemble able to be altered with ensemble items moved from one ensemble to another, colors and patterns changed, and reassembled interactively, the ensembles able to be displayed using models 20 and animation specified by the user.

18. The system according to Claim 17, wherein a user can purchase an entire ensemble, or any part of the ensemble.

19. The system according to Claim 16, wherein the user can specify additional desired matching items to be retrieved and displayed for viewing that may not be included in the array.

20. The system according to Claim 1, wherein the user can override a predetermined intelligence rule used by the system to make recommendations to the user.

21. The system according to Claim 20, wherein the predetermined intelligence rules pertain to determining whether two colors match.

A system and method for enabling on-line purchasers to customize and personalize their purchasing options by prompting the customer to indicate customer preferences regarding merchandise and services to be purchased on-line. The system and method use intelligent process and rule-driven inquiry-databases, intelligent product databases, artificial intelligence rules, data comparison algorithms, animation software, graphics and video input and output hardware and software and/or video streaming to (1) guide consumers in specifying customer preferences, (2) make purchasing recommendations to consumers, (3) narrow selections of merchandise or services, (4) determine the fit of merchandise, (5) configure and optimize various options of subsystems into a complete system, (6) layout, compose and/or animate merchandise or models wearing merchandise, and (7) display the fitted system of multiple items with the recommended and/or selected settings.

STEP FIVE: Wizard searches for qualified items to recommend to the shopper

The Shopper makes selections in the tables above, and/or enters favored designers not included in the table.

The Wizard compiles data, create comparison files, combine the pre-determined apparel rules database, and search the intelligent apparel database for products that qualify. (See Figure 11C)

STEP SIX: Interactive Selection and Accessory Configuration (See Figure 11D)

The Wizard presents the recommendations in a graphical array format.

The Shopper reviews the recommendations and details, with the aid of the Wizard, makes selections, adjustments, color choices, and request accessory recommendations, make choices and shopping decisions. Or, the shopper may request Wizard to modify input and search for other recommendations.

STEP SEVEN: Fitting and Alteration Alert

The Wizard formats the final selected apparel sets, redisplay with correct chosen combinations and specifications, as well as recommend alterations if needed.

STEP EIGHT: Personalized Display/Demonstration Option

The Shopper may request Personalized Display/Demonstration Option by entering descriptions of personal physical makeup and characteristics.

The Wizard selects and composes suitable model, and simulates run-way display with the assembled apparel ensembles.

STEP NINE: Place Order, Continue Shopping, Store Data, or Exit

The shopper can (1) approve the ensembles, place order and exit, or (2) add purchases to the shopping cart and continue shopping; (3) make further modifications; (4) store data in his/her Personal Folder for later revisit.

Order	After Order Process, the shopper has the option either to continue shopping or exit.
Add to Cart, Continue Shopping	The Wizard assist in shopping either in the same category, other categories, or for a different wearer (buying for someone else.)
Modify	The profile and ensemble data are presented for modification
Save in Personal Folder	The data can be automatically saved, while the shopper retains the option to delete.

DECLARATION AND POWER OF ATTORNEY

As a below named inventor, I hereby declare that:

My residence, post office address and citizenship are as stated below next to my name. I believe I am the original, first and sole inventor (if only one name is listed below) or an original, first and joint inventor (if plural names are listed below) of the subject matter which is claimed and for which a patent is sought on the invention entitled System And Method For Interactive, Computer Assisted Personalization Of On-Line Merchandise Purchases the specification of which is attached hereto and which claims the benefit of the July 20, 1999 filing date of Provisional U.S. Patent Application Serial No. 60/144,712.

I hereby state that I have reviewed and understand the contents of the above identified specification, including the claims, as amended by any amendment referred to above.

I acknowledge the duty to disclosure information which is material to the examination of this application in accordance with Title 37, Code of Federal Regulations, Section 1.56

I hereby claim foreign priority benefits under Title 35, United States Code, Section 119 of any foreign application(s) for patent or inventor's certificate listed below and have also identified below any foreign application for patent or inventor's certification having a filing date before that of the application on which priority is claimed:

None

I hereby claim the benefit under Title 35, United States Code, Section 1.20 of any United States application(s) listed below and, insofar as the subject matter of each of the claims of this application is not disclosed in the prior United States application in the manner provided by the first paragraph of Title 35, United States Code, Section 1.12, I acknowledge the duty to disclose material information as defined in Title 37, Code of Federal Regulations, Section 1.56 which occurred between the filing date of the prior application and the national or PCT international filing date of this application:

None

I hereby declare that all statements made herein of my own knowledge are true and that all statements made on information and belief are believed to be true; and further that these statements were made with the knowledge that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, under Section 1001 of Title 18 of the United States Code
